New Safe Water System

Our earlier Safe Water system used a diffuser-based mixing arrangement and took over an hour for the ozone concentration in water to reach 0.2ppm – the amount of ozone required to kill e-coli in water.

Remote villages, where electricity supply is irregular, struggle to run the system this long on a regular basis. We had to start looking for cost-effective solutions to reduce the mixing time, but still making sure that different water profiles were made safe.

Our extensive research led us to a machine which uses venturi-based mixing. This system, combined with 2 grams/hour ozone generator has helped achieve 0.2ppm of ozone in about 35minutes – a significant improvement on the earlier system.

Five Safe Water systems (new venture-based system) were installed in the month of June, in Andhra Pradesh and Karnataka.
